NASW Legal Defense Fund
Application for Assistance

BACKGROUND

The NASW Legal Defense Fund (LDF) was established in 1972 by the NASW Board of Directors to advance the legal interests of the social work profession. One of the major ways in which this is done is through grants of financial assistance to defray the legal expenses of NASW members engaged in litigation related to the NASW Code of Ethics, social work principles, and/or standards of social work practice advocated by the association. LDF is administered by a Board of Trustees appointed by the President of NASW. The Trustees meet twice a year, the spring and fall, to review all properly completed applications that meet LDF qualifications and to conduct other business required for the administration of the Fund.

Financial support for LDF is received from voluntary contributions, principally from the LDF check-off on the NASW member dues renewal form. The Trustees’ ability to provide assistance to association members is limited by the contributions received and resources available.

INDIVIDUAL APPLICATION CRITERIA

The following questions should be addressed when completing the attached application. The information will be considered during the application review process to determine whether a matter will receive financial support from the LDF fund:

- Whether the applicant is an active member of NASW;
- Whether the issues presented in the application are significant to the social work profession;
- Whether the legal matter/lawsuit involves the NASW Code of Ethics or principles and standards of social work practice advocated by NASW;
- Whether funds are needed to initiate legal action which promotes the interests of the social work profession or of a significantly large group of NASW members. Examples of issues of interest include pay equity, client confidentiality, restrictions or prohibitions on the right of social workers to join professional organizations, regulatory restrictions that improperly limit social work practice, etc.,
- Whether there is a likelihood of success in the legal action.

CLASS ACTION LAWSUITS

Class action lawsuits provide a procedure by which one or more persons may sue as representatives of a larger group (the class) without a need to name every individual member of the class as plaintiffs. This type of litigation may involve considerations that are not applicable in individual suits. In addition to the information requested for an individual applicant, an application involving a class action should also discuss why the class action is necessary to advance the NASW Code of Ethics or standards of social work practice advocated by the association. The application should also provide the names and addresses of the individuals who will be named as class representatives and indicate which of the class representatives are NASW members. The class relief sought in the lawsuit and its benefit to social workers should also be identified.
